The Agricultural College Grounds-A New Meeting House- Δ Banker Has a Scene "I Love Yeu,"

Your correspondent and some others among them a gentleman lately returned from Oregon and Washington territory from Origin and Washington Criticity, took is the city and to surroundings few mornings ago. Passing through the northwest part of the city where stately frame buildings and neadly arranged grounds have taken the places of the "old ntry" oow shods and unseemly corrals the extent of making one less his bear-a for the want of familiar landmarks, stely mon the wheat fields that are a part of the thousands of acres that make Cache county the graciary of Utah. Here and directly north of Logan is mile after mile of weedless, cultivated land, nearly ever ucre of which has a water right and is accessible to water. Here is raised an average of thirty-five bushels of grain on an acre. Going some two niles, and keepwe have the may fields of Logan and Benson ward. Here chiefly is where the many thousand tons of hay is grown that feeds and thanko's livery horses and cattle. Here, to, will number a hundred or more limpid springs that oursel to inspire such piscatorial ambition in the owners as would furnish three Logans with the finest quality of the finny tribe. Retracting our road to town, we follow the callood, and we see the least prepossessing part of it. That part which should be the must ingiting to the stranger is the only part which has not some potent resiseming feature, and the cye sore and diagrace to this mar; that which sweets the greatest defriment to Logan in turning away the monied stranger the feature that he sees first and that discourages him most is the Logan depot. How long shall a long suffering poople be compelled to put up with an entarged sex car for a freight bouse, waiting room and office? Sconlingly, just as long as a monopoly road has all the say and falls to recornize a jespile to whom it mostly owes the swistence. From here a few years are the southwest feeds of Logan, but what is now a fenced, built-up and lababited part of town. A mile further on and the former open, distant hay fields are now near and handy fenced pastures. Oding from here up the south west is of former logan, we pass on the south what is now the Sixth and Seventh warrois, the two most heautiful, though not so well built up, wards in Logan. The road now leads us up the Temple diagway. Arriving at the top of attractive programme is prepared, and a ninge time is expected.

One of Logan's private bankers went into the barber shop yesterday to change some money. When leaving in a hurry he forgot a pile of eight $80 gold pieces lying on the soft. Ordinary course of business made a demand in a few hours, but our Crossus' memory was not so long as his list of debts, and failed to remind him what be had done with the mosey. Uncasiness grew to anxiety, anxiety to alarm and after hours of excited search, alarm settled down to a plitful despair. He was returning home in this plitful condition when he called at the barber shop and related his misfurtume. Without more ado the genial Lamoreaux handed him his money. The craction was too much. Tears sprang to this eyes, and in broken accesses and a foreign brogue, he exclaimed: "All I can do is to express dat I low you." LOGAN, April 27, 1889.

Mr. Eills' Lecture at the Temple of Honor Hall Sunday Evening.

There was a large audience present in Temple of Honor hall Sunday evening to hear Mr. Charles Ellis on the above named topic, and, judging from the manner in which the speaker's thoughts were received, it was a highly appreciative audience. Below is a synopsis of the diswitchmanner for city property.
